BUDGET AND SPENDING: AN ANALYSIS OF THE COUNTERAIR MISSION IS REQUIRED TO HELP ENSURE THAT THE AIR FORCE IS BUYING THE CAPABILITIES IT NEED (PAPERBACK)

Determining how to best allocate Air Force resources among the nine mission areas and within the counterair mission, on which billions of dollars are spent annually, is a difficult and complex task. One management tool that can be used to facilitate this task is mission area analysis, a structured, analytical process by which overall mission deficiencies and alternative solutions are identified and evaluated. Mission area analysis provides all levels of management with the ability to obtain a documented analysis and justification explaining why a particular budgeted item is considered to be the most effective solution to correcting a formally identified mission deficiency. GAO found that the Tactical Air Command is not conducting a counterair mission area analysis to identify deficiencies and validate needs. Instead, it uses an array of military judgments and miscellaneous studies in its requirements process. As a result, requirements are based on perceived deficiencies in mission capabilities rather than on an analysis of the mission. Air Force Headquarters has developed a process for performing Air Force-wide mission area analysis which shows strong potential. However, efforts are needed to improve the credibility and acceptance of this process. The individual counterair related programs within the Air Force s annual budget are not traceable back to a well-documented mission area analysis and justification.
