Not illustrated. 1884 Excerpt: .roots and inflexions only, but the whole spirit of the Egyptian language, is closer to the Semitic than to any other family; and finally, how it happens that of all the other national races of Africa, not one besides the Egyptian possessed those qualities of enduring laboriousness, intelligent subordination, scientific inventiveness, and strong artistic instinct, which are the outcome of a bent and capacity of the soul and intellect that characterise none but the races of Asiatic origin, and which we should seek for in vain among any other of the native races of Northern Africa. The whole Nile valley and the indigenous population south of the Delta were first subjugated by the invading race, and their princes established their residence at This--Abydos. The first of these kings, according to every chronicler known to us, was Menes, or Mena, a native of This.¹ Mariette's excavations...
