Excerpt: . sent to save As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I als sent them into the world (John 17: 18). the picture forming the frontispiece presents a robust-looking man out on a wide, deep sea, leisurely rowing along in a large lifeboat, looking skyward, and singing lustily as he rows, I m bound for the kingdom, glory, hallelujah, while all around him are hundreds of drowning men and women struggling vainly for life amid the angry billows. But in his selfish joy he moves leisurely on, singing his psalmsrand shouting his hallelujahs, apparently unmoved by the fearful catastrophes that are almost momentarily taking place around him--the look of despair, the piteous cry for help, the sinking to rise no more, of one and another and another--but on he rows, and on he sings, and the lifeboat remains empty! Now,...
