I m nought but scars as you would know, If I could dare my form to show, --- Tis hack d and hew d from top to toe. J L. !2ar Mr. Pat, you melt my heart; What cut and slash d in ev ry part? P. The trunk, tis true, has suffer d sore, Nor could it, Beauty, suffer more; But for the branches of the tree, They re all just as they ought to be: But for my wounds I have a plaster, In a most kind and gen rous master L. What children has the Doctor pray? And may I ask what age are they? P. Children indeed, why he had five; But none of them are now alive: And his sweet wife, our country s pride, Three months ago in childbed died. Her death made many a bosom ache Upon the banks of Keswick Lake. She thought not, as fine ladies do, Of dresses smart, all pink and blue, Who think to catch the wand ring eye Of any fool that s passing by. Where er she mov d, so nice, so fair, All view d the well-bred lady there: But more, who did my mistress see, Saw the mild form of Charity.--As for my master, he can show More learning than e en Bishops know. What knowledge lies beneath his hat And the fine wig...
